

I have only the vaguest recollection of seeing Dzuro, I think once, in the lift lobby on the day in question.

I have no recollection of anything other than an inconsequential exchange of "pleasantries."

Dan,

Since Peter reports to you now, I would like to inform you about two encounters I had with Peter today.

I met Peter in the cafeteria on 2nd floor this morning, I was leaving the room while Peter was coming in. I said "Good morning, Peter", to which he responded something to the effect where I was with my responses to his 38 questions.

What does 'How are you' actually sound like when spoken in - quote - "a rather challenging voice"? What does it sound like?

During the lunch time, again by accident, I met Peter by the lift on 2nd floor. Peter approached me and ask in a rather challenging voice, how I was doing. I responded I was doing fine. Peter then made a step towards me, which put him rather close, and in the same tone he said that he did not believe I was doing fine. Then the lift arrived I stepped in, while Peter stayed behind.

I do not really understand Peter's behaviour recently, but it appeared to me Peter wanted to provoke me.

What is not to understand? I ask questions. He refuses to answer.

I have no intention to get myself involved with Peter with just anything, particularly since he is no longer reporting to me. I shall do my best to avoid any contact with Peter, until such time his behaviour becomes professional.

I am writing this email for the record.

Dzuro considers that my asking questions about the PIP that he himself drafted constitutes "provocation"?

Thank you and best regards

Vlad

This is suggestive of a retaliatory motive, but could Dzuro actually BE any more trivial???
